FIRST BIENNIAL EXHIBITION OF CONTEMPORARY AMERICAN PAINTING

NOVEMBER 22ND, 1932
TO JANUARY 5TH, 1933

WHITNEY MUSEUM OF AMERICAN ART
TEN WEST EIGHTH STREET · NEW YORK

FOREWORD

IN presenting the First Biennial Exhibition of Contemporary American Painting the Whitney Museum of American Art is following a precedent established by almost every important art museum in the United States of holding annually large and important exhibitions of American Art. An increasingly liberal spirit has broadened the scope of these exhibitions so that in recent years they have assumed greater importance to both artist and public.

Believing that there exists in New York a need for this comprehensive type of exhibition in which the recent work of American artists may be seen under favorable circumstances, the Whitney Museum of American Art has established a series of exhibitions of painting, sculpture and the graphic arts, so that each year will bring one large exhibition. This year we inaugurate the series by the present show of paintings in oil. To make this exhibition representative of the various trends in painting throughout the country one hundred fifty-seven artists have been invited to contribute canvases of their own selection. This is a departure from the policy of other exhibitions similar in character where the jury system has obtained. Also, the Whitney Museum of American Art will award no prizes, but has set aside the sum of twenty thousand dollars each year for the purchase of works of outstanding excellence from the exhibitions.

It is almost inevitable that the limitations of space should compel the exclusion of many artists who are of equal importance to those invited. Nevertheless, we trust that this exhibition will represent in a broad way some of the most notable characteristics of American painting today.
